EFI AUTOMOTIVE TECHNOLOGIES

EFI AUTOMOTIVE OFFERS THREE DIFFERENT SENSOR TECHNOLOGIES:

VARIABLE RELUCTANCE SENSORS (VRS):

VRS sensors are inductive (passive) and need no energy supply. These sensors can detect the teeth of a rotating wheel when they pass by the magnetic face of the sensor. The VRS sensor then sends an electric signal to the ECU, allowing the ECU to determine the speed and position of a trigger wheel (such as the camshaft, crankshaft and transmission)

HALL EFFECT SENSORS:

Hall effect sensors are active and require energy supply. They detect the presence of teeth and gaps in a ferromagnetic trigger wheel or the North/South poles of a magnet ring.

They deliver a digital signal to the ECU in order to determine the speed or position of a camshaft, crankshaft or transmission.

TEMPERATURE SENSORS WITH THERMISTORS PTC OR NTC:

A thermistor is a type of resistor whose ohmic resistance varies significantly with temperature. The way the resistance value varies depends on the type of component used.

For a PTC (Positive Temperature Coefficient) thermistor, the resistance increases when the temperature rises.

For a NTC (Negative Temperature Coefficient) thermistor, the resistance decreases when the temperature goes down.

EFI AUTOMOTIVE SENSORS PRODUCT LINES

THESE DIFFERENT TECHNOLOGIES ARE USED FOR SEVERAL PRODUCT LINES OF SENSORS DEPENDING ON THE ROLE THEY PLAY IN THE VEHICLE:

CAMSHAFT SENSORS:

Sends information to the ECU on the position of the engine when the car starts, by monitoring the position of a cylinder (the one ending its compression)

ENGINE TEMPERATURE SENSORS:

The functioning of the engine is mostly governed by its internal temperature. Therefore, there are sensors to measure the temperature of the air intake, the cooling system and the engine oil.

CRANKSHAFT SENSORS:

Sends information to the ECU on the rotation speed of the engine, by indicating the position of the Top Dead Center (TDC)

OUTSIDE AIR TEMPERATURE SENSORS/ CLIMATE CONTROL SENSORS:

These sensors monitor temperature and are used to inform the car passengers on the outside temperature and to allow them to set up a comfortable environment in the cabin.

THESE SENSORS ARE ESSENTIAL TO THE CORRECT FUNCTIONING OF THE VEHICLE (BY ALLOWING IT TO START, FOR INSTANCE), IT IS REQUIRED TO HAVE THEM SERVICED ON A REGULAR BASIS.
