

PLANO

Are all Plano gun cases airline approved?

No. The top series we recommend for air travel are the Field Locker and All Weather series. These cases have air pressure release valves to equalize changes in temperature and elevation, plus padlock holes to accommodate TSA-approved locks.

I have a reverse limb crossbow. Which Plano case do I need?

We recommend the Manta crossbow case for most crossbows. It has been tested and sized specifically with Barnett crossbows.

I use the clear stows to organize my tackle, but I don't like the color of the latches. Can I purchase a different color?

Yes, we do have different color latch options available for Plano StowAway utility boxes.

I have an old Dorskocil gun case. Are parts available?

Our DLX model cases took the place of that model case. Whatever case you have, we should be able to help you find the appropriate replacement keys or latches.

Are replacement O-ring gaskets available for the Sportsman's trunks?

Yes. We have the gaskets and latches available for purchase. Reach out to our customer service team to place an order.

What is this rubber pad that came with my Guide Series™ waterproof box?

If you take your Guide Series waterproof box on an airplane, pressure changes may cause the box to seal shut. This rubber pad should be placed in the seal to make it easier to open the box after the flight.

What is the difference between StowAway series?

Plano offers four StowAway series: 3400, 3500, 3600 and 3700. The utility boxes in each series adhere very closely to the same dimensional size, although certain features, lids and latches may slightly affect final dimensions.

3400 Series (8.25"L x 4.25"W and smaller): Compact, wallet-sized organizers for small lures and accessories.

3500 Series (9.00"L x 5.00"W): Intermediate-sized boxes for storing a wide variety of baits and accessories.

3600 Series (10.75"L x 7.25"W): Customizable storage options for most standard tackle.

3700 Series (14.00"L x 9.00"W): Our largest Stows for storing a specialty baits, accessories and more.

What size is my StowAway?

One place to look is on the packaging or the item your StowAways were included with (such as a tackle bag or rack system). Many of our fishing storage solutions identify a corresponding StowAway series so you can select the right size Stows when purchasing more. The series number is written on many of our soft bags, or you can find it listed on the product page on our website.

If your StowAway was purchased individually, the best way to figure out the series it falls under is to measure it. Use the measurements below as a guide, keeping in mind that final dimensions may be slightly different. So pick whatever series is closest to the dimensions you measure.

3400 Series: 8.25”L x 4.25”W and smaller

3500 Series: 9.00”L x 5.00”W

3600 Series: 10.75”L x 7.25”W

3700 Series: 14.00”L x 9.00”W

What is the difference between “fixed” and “adjustable” StowAways?

Fixed StowAways have compartments that cannot be moved or customized. Adjustable StowAways come with dividers that slide into place to create the appropriate number and size of compartments to suit your needs.

My StowAway lists that it has a range of compartments (e.g. “4-24 compartments”). What does that mean?

This means a StowAway has adjustable compartments. The smallest value identifies the minimum number of compartments, which are fixed. The largest value identifies the maximum number of compartments you can create. The more compartments you make, the smaller they’ll be. The fewer compartments you make, the larger they’ll be. Adjust the included dividers into whatever configuration works best for you.
