All of this comes together to enhance the OEM car design and body line to create an ultra-high quality, aggressive visual appearance to make your car magazine and trophy worthy.

Designed by master automotive designer Jon Sibal, and CSF Radiators, the SEMA debuted, STREETFIGHTER LA MITSUBISHI EVO X WIDE BODY BASE KIT brings bolt-on or mold-on time attack and race track performance technology to upgrade the incredible OEM final version of this classic high-performance car. From the front bumper pushouts to the rear door, flare and bumper extensions, this kit punches out OEM body lines and brings a muscular and profound stance to the car. Every detail is incorporated including special consideration to venting and the rear door and handle. Coupled with an amazing and deeply functional aero program this car has graced the cover of SuperStreet, S3 and Banzai Magazines all in the same month.

The STREETFIGHTER LA MITSUBISHI EVO X FRP AERO KIT integrates and enhances the base kit to race track and show quality levels. The functional front splitter and canards bring airflow downforce aggressiveness and the side skirt extensions drive the airstream off the front wheel and around the underside of the car. The 3 piece rear diffuser/undertray delivers the ultimate escape, expansion and transition of the low-velocity airflow and reduces turbulence as you race past your competition.

But arguably the biggest scene-stealer from the Toyo booth was Streetfighter LA's widebody E46 with supercharged V8 swap—but the power plant was not from GM! That there, folks, is a Mopar Hemi 8-pot, going way outside the norm—but then this is coming from the guys who shoehorned an RB26 into an E36, so you know they're always looking to shake things up. Our friends at RAD Industries worked on the car—often as we were visiting the shop—but we never once noticed the unusual mill, nor did they ever point it out to us. If this thing is going drifting, we can't wait to see it slide in anger; who knows, Streetfighter LA may by onto something big.
